

We all want the best for Australia. Let's work together.

The best kind of welfare is a secure job

All Australians want to enjoy a better lifestyle and look ahead to a brighter future for their family. They want to know how their life can improve; not in four years' time but now. We need bold new ideas to stimulate our economy, drive growth and increase revenue.

One way we can do this is by allowing businesses and contractors to pay their tax annually once they've earned their money, rather than the provisional tax they currently pay in advance each quarter. This will keep up to $70 billion in our economy, and each time $70 billion is spent the government gets 10% GST. That's an extra $7 billion in revenue for schools, hospitals and infrastructure.

What Australia makes, makes Australia

If you want a strong economy you have to make things. Japan has become the world's third largest economy by processing Australian resources. Wages in Japan are higher, the cost of energy is more expensive and Japan suffers from the tyranny of distance. Yet Australia sells its mineral ores at a low price per tonne and Japan sells final products for 10,000 times more.

To create jobs and generate more revenue the Australian Government needs to encourage the use of the mineral resource wealth of Western Australia and Queensland to support downstream manufacturing in states and territories that don't have those resources, such as New South Wales, South Australia, Tasmania and Victoria.

This will create jobs, increase our exports, deliver greater revenue and a rising, rather than declining, standard of living for all Australians. Higher export revenue means better education and health services for our people.

The best security an Australian can have is a secure home to call their own

We propose to make home loans tax deductible to encourage home ownership, boost the construction industry and help everyday Australians get ahead in these tough times. The great Australian dream is a beyond many hardworking Australians today. Is this what we want for our country? Our forefathers who built the foundations of this country expect better of us.

The best life for Australians is a happy family life

We want to lessen the strain on Australian families by reducing power prices. We'll start by ordering a state-by-state review of the power company infrastructure loans we're all paying for.

Our party wants to ease congestion in our cities by offering zonal tax incentives to people living in regional Australia, where over 80% of the nation's wealth is generated.

What Australia grows, grows Australia

We're behind Australian farmers and believe they should be supported when they need it most – in times of natural disaster and hardship.

Australia is the greatest country on earth. If we work together, we can achieve the extraordinary and make it all it can be.
